How to Find an Arthritis Buddy for Peer Support

Quick Answer: Arthritis peer support buddies are available through the NRAS Volunteer Ambassador programme, Arthritis UK self-help groups, Arthritis Action, and online communities including Healthunlocked. These connect you with someone who has lived experience of arthritis for practical advice and emotional support.

Research consistently shows that peer support improves pain management, reduces depression, and increases confidence in managing long-term conditions.

NRAS Volunteer Ambassador Programme

The National Rheumatoid Arthritis Society (NRAS) runs a volunteer ambassador programme where trained volunteers with lived RA experience provide one-to-one support. This is particularly valuable around the time of diagnosis. Contact NRAS on 0800 298 7650 to be connected with an ambassador.

Q&A;

Question: Can I become a peer support volunteer myself? Short answer: Yes — both Arthritis UK and NRAS actively recruit volunteers with arthritis experience. Being a buddy benefits both the person supported and the volunteer.

Question: Is peer support only for people recently diagnosed? Short answer: Not at all — peer support is valuable at any stage, including when navigating medication changes, employment challenges, or mental health difficulties.

Question: Are online communities safe and moderated? Short answer: The NRAS Healthunlocked and Arthritis UK communities are both moderated by trained staff. Always verify medical advice with your healthcare team before acting on it.
